With nearly a billion hungry people / in the world, / there is obviously no single cause.

However, / far and away / the biggest cause / is poverty.

Seventy-nine percent / of the world's hungry / live / in nations / that are net exporters of food.

How can this be?

The reason / people are hungry / in those countries / is that / the products / produced there / are sold / on the world market.

As a result, / the local citizens / cannot afford to pay / for them.

In the modern age / you do not starve / because you have no food, / you starve / because you have no money.

The real problem / behind this / is that / food is too expensive / and many people are too poor / to buy it.

The solution to this problem / is to reduce the cost of food.

Solar power / is an incredibly useful technology / because the sun is a source / of free, renewable energy.

Still, / solar panels / have often been criticized / for their high cost.

Fortunately, / this issue is being addressed / by the development / of new solar cells / that are far cheaper / than the panels / currently used.

These new cells are produced / as liquids / so that they can be painted / on walls and roofs.

As a result, / researchers are optimistic / that solar paint / will be a popular replacement / for solar panels.

While very few people / can set up solar panels / on their own, / painting is simple.

Therefore, / this simplicity will provide / a cost-effective and convenient alternative / to installing solar panels.

It will enable / more people / to use solar energy.

You may think that / you need to avoid mistakes / to succeed.

But / failure / is actually a key to success.

This is because / failure is a form of feedback.

It indicates that / the way / you are trying / to achieve your goal / is not effective.

So / you should stop / using your current method.

As a result, / you will begin / looking for a new way / to reach your goal.

For instance, / if your grades do not improve / when you study alone, / you might consider / joining a study group.

This example shows / how failures are necessary steps / on the long path / to success.

Each time you fail, / make the necessary changes / until you eventually achieve your goal.

It is believed that / the only skill / a translator needs / is to know the exact meaning / of a given word.

However, / this is not enough.

The reason is that / word-for-word translations / are sometimes inaccurate.

An expression / may have an intended meaning / that is not the same / as its literal meaning.

For example, / the English expression find one's feet / literally means / “to determine the location / of your feet.”

This does not match / the intended meaning, / which is “to adjust to a new environment.”

To accurately translate expressions / such as this one, / translators must fully understand / the usage of both languages.

This allows them to understand / the true meaning / of the original text / and to express it / in another language / correctly.
